

"THE OBSERVABLE CHOICES; WHAT'S THE IMPACT?"

PETER GILJAM

Can we create an environment where we as trainers can read our animals a lot better? Can we take away the insecurities about our capabilities of reading our animals?

In the past 16+ years I've learned to observe the animals to apply the best training techniques which fits the individual. To be able to be successful I need to know what the animal responds to or let's turn it around, give the animal a recognisable situation with the predicted outcome.

When you add the animal into a recognisable environment it is much easier to read the animals body language if the animal want's to participate. Which means a stronger observable "Yes - No". This leads to higher confidence from both team members "trainer and learner"
